Galaxy S25 Ultra display rumors are all over the place right now, with three sources claiming Samsung's flagship will be behind Apple's top phones in screen tech.

Last night, well-known leaker Roland Quandt posted that Samsung suppliers have started making parts for the Galaxy S25 series. Parts production for the Galaxy S24 family allegedly began in November last year so Samsung appears to be ahead of schedule but whether this means it's eyeing an early launch is not known.

Samsung suppliers are sure blasting along making thousands of parts for S25 series already. And for that new headset TM Roh keeps babbling on about, too.

As far as I know, Galaxy S25 Ultra has obviously improved in brightness, viewing angle, screen color accuracy and many other aspects, and it looks much better to the naked eye, so I believe S25 Ultra to adopt M14 new material.

The improvement in the viewing experience led him to theorize that the phone features the new M14 material, which is reportedly also used by the iPhone 16 Pro and Pro Max.

Confirmed with materials suppliers that the S25 Ultra will use M13 rather than M14 materials for cost reasons.

Young explains that phones with Artificial Intelligence (AI) require more processing power than standard devices as they require more capable chips as well as more memory. While there's a clear demand for this increase, some manufacturers are cutting corners in order to keep costs down.

The M14 OLED panel is Samsung's highest-performing panel, but it's also significantly more expensive than the M13 panel.

South Korean outlet ET News also says that the Galaxy S25 series will continue to use the M13 organic material set. The publication learned from an insider that Samsung Display has started taking orders for the Galaxy S25 family.

The displays are rumored to be roughly the same size as those seen this year. The base model will have a 6.16-inch screen, the Plus model will sport a 6.66-inch display, and the Ultra will rock a 6.86-inch panel.

While some prospective buyers may be disappointed to know that Samsung isn't going to use its best screen for the Galaxy S25, this is seemingly an established pattern at this point. iPhones usually get even number OLED panels while Samsung and Chinese manufacturers use odd number sets. Each generation of material is used for two years.

←Whyatt I didn't know that. I'll stick with my iPhone15 pro max and Pixel 8 pro for the next 4 years. I'm finally throwing in the towel for needing to have the newest phone ever year or 2. It gets old and I'm tired. I don't do anything that even warrants me to upgrade anymore, never did to tell you the truth.

Samsung should start making quality screens because in recent years there have been thousands of damaged ones with green lines, they are not producing quality 🤦
